Throughout this course, you will experience a variety of engaging, standards-based learning activities that are directly applicable to the classroom. After we discuss the domains and elements of student engagement, we will navigate standards from the perspectives of various stakeholders. You will explore standards from their inception through the Common Core State Standards and identify essential aspects of your curriculum that are optimal for standards-based learning activities. Alignment criteria will assist you in generating assessments and scoring guides aligned to standards and immediately useful in your school setting. With the groundwork set, we're off to hit our target by experiencing engaging standards-based learning activities that develop each of the eleven QFL Process Skills common to all disciplines and grade levels. The learning activities in this course are from well-known educational resources such as The Library of Congress, 3rd Learning, WritingFix, HistoryFix, Kinetic City, BrainPop, Lanternfish, Exploratorium, Scholastic Art, Science NetLinks, and MST (Math, Science and Technology). You will explore a strategy to evaluate, design, modify, and expand learning activities for your classroom while maintaining the integrity of the standard and the process skills you are using to guide your planning.
